Vehicle maintenance reminder

Conduct major personal-owned vehicle maintenance only at specified locations. The Army, Air Force Exchange Service car care center, located in building 222, and the 52nd Services Squadron Auto Skills and Development Center in building 189 are the only acceptable locations for such vehicle maintenance. At these locations, people can perform oil changes, battery removal and installation, brake changes, antifreeze changes, transmission oil changes, etc. Minor maintenance such as tire changing may still be performed in resident parking areas. Car washing in military family housing or government-leased housing areas is prohibited.

Gate closures

- Effective immediately, the Army, Air Force Exchange Services gate behind the Bitburg Annex BX and adjacent to the temporary living facility will be closed to all vehicle and pedestrian traffic until further notice. Call Master Sgt. Todd Nappe at 452-7843 for details.
- The Spangdahlem AB main gate will be closed Aug. 11 through Sept. 4. The old main gate will be open during this period for 24-hour installation entry and exit. Traffic control signage will be posted at the old main gate, giving priority to incoming traffic. The old contractor gate between the Binsfeld and Speicher/ Herforst traffic circle will be open for the 6-8 a.m. morning rush. For more information call Staff Sgt. Joseph Quevedo, SABER project manager, at 452-6847.

Traffic changes

• The Repair Fairchild and Maxwell Blvd. project is underway now through the end of October. Traffic flow is one-way near the Burger King intersection and will change to the opposite direction one-way from the Burger King intersection to the chapel intersection beginning Sept. 5. Parking in front of designated buildings will be restricted from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. Notices will be posted on affected buildings and vehicles two days prior. For more information, call the 52nd Civil Engineer Squadron construction management office at 452-7214.

Top 3 meeting

The monthly Top 3 meeting and barbecue is scheduled for Wednesday at 11 a.m. at the base pavilion. The alternate site will be the Brick House in case of inclement weather. Guest speakers will be Col. Stephen Mueller, 52nd Fighter Wing commander, and Command Chief Master Sgt. James Kelly, the new 52nd FW command chief master sergeant.

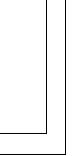

Housing contest

The Spangdahlem AB housing office will conduct a Balcony and Yard of the Month program for all five housing areas. Balcony and yard judging takes place Monday and will be based on overall neatness and appearance. Call the housing office at 452-7944 for details.

IEA projects are now reality at Spang

The Installation Excellence Award scorecard has been a mainstay in the Eifel Times in recent months. Now wing members can enjoy the tangible results represented in the updates.

Funds for a number of base improvements were allotted when Spangdahlem Air Base won the 2002 and 2003 Commander-in-Chief Installation Excellence competition at U.S. Air Forces in Europe-level and garnered $500,000 for each win.

Wing officials assigned coordinators to 11 selected projects. A few of the more significant undertakings included the development of the Brick House, the hard-ened aircraft shelter crew shacks and the pavilion improvements.

The Brick House is a state-of-the-art entertainment depot developed through Combat CHEER, an initiative designed to boost and maintain Airman morale. The Brick House provides Airmen with free pool table usage, Xbox play, darts and a variety of live entertainment.

"We undertook a huge project, and our goal was to show the customers we were really focused on a top-notch facility," said Eddy Mentzer, former Youth Services director. "We did not want a glorified dayroom, but something loosely based on the adult entertainment venues in the states."

Mr. Mentzer noted that with the amount of work completed, the establishment opened very quickly.

"I think we exceeded everyone's expectations, and that is really evident in the praise we have received from Gen. Robert H. "Doc" Foglesong, USAFE commander, and Dr. James Roche, Secretary of the Air Force," added Mr. Mentzer. "In eight months, we turned an empty room into a showcase for the Air Force."

The pavilion improvements project, for example, provides a covered multi-purpose ball field for various sport activities during inclement weather conditions, said Udo Stuermer, 52nd Civil Engineer Squadron engineering flight chief. Mr. Stuermer added the project was ambitious, with several proposals having been presented to the wing before the final version was selected and built.

"The actual design was done, but the location of the facility was actually changed from the Bitburg Annex to Spangdahlem Air Base," Mr. Stuermer said.

By June 2003, the design was complete and by June 2004, the project was complete, Mr. Stuermer said.

The 52nd Aircraft Maintenance Squadron took on two projects, one for the construction of mezzanines and the other for the purchase of 43 new crew shacks to be used in the flightline's hardened aircraft shelters.

"Our squadron was very satisfied with the end result of both projects," said Master Sgt. John Murphy, 52nd AMXS squadron facilities manager. "The ultimate goal was to have all of the hardened aircraft shelters completely renovated and restored with working showering facilities for all three aircraft maintenance units."

Col. Stephen Mueller, 52nd Fighter Wing commander, credited the persistence and cooperation of numerous individuals and agencies in successfully completing all the IEA projects in less than three years.

"It took the involvement of nearly everyone in the wing to not only give us a vision, but to carry that out," Colonel Mueller said. "Most improvements became a reality during the tours of the people here now. That's really impressive and shows why we earned the money in the first place."

He also shared his vision for how new projects will fit into Spangdahlem AB's evolving mission.

"I think we'll be contenders again in future IEA competitions, and I expect the winnings from that to be used for new projects and improvements on our current projects," the commander said.

Team Eifel broadcaster takes TJ award for radio show

Story and photos by Senior Airman Amaani Lyle 52nd Fighter Wing Public Affairs Office

Go figure that a slightly disarrayed desk adorned with a Sacramento Kings bobble head and an assortment of books -- one titled "Jerks at Work" -- belongs to a man who just won the highest award the Department of Defense has to offer in his field.

Tech. Sgt. Chris Eder, former Detachment 9, Armed Forces News producer, permanently changes station from Spangdahlem Air Base to Langley Air Force Base, Va., July 31 with perhaps his most significant tote: the Department of Defense-bestowed Thomas Jefferson Award given for professional excellence across all branches of the military.

"I tried so hard to have a 'radio personality' name and to customize the material to what the judges wanted," Sergeant Eder said.

Hence came the inception of the "Bob and Kasbah Show" on Freedom Radio 107.7 in Baghdad last year. Sergeant Eder took on the airwaves with fellow broadcaster Tech. Sgt. Bob Herron, AFN Detachment 10, Yokota Air Base, Japan. Although the pair was originally deployed in October to set up the broadcast operations detachment there, they were on-air by December and pulled only six four-hour shifts over the course of a month.

Their subsequent win attests to the fact that a month was long enough to get the TJ judges' attention and also garner first place in the National Association of Government Communicators. Sergeant Eder added that he also took years of judges' past critiques and designed a show around their feedback.

"The TJ is given for a number of factors," Sergeant Eder said. "They critique the style of sequences, what you say, how you say it, and most importantly, how well you can integrate command information into an entertaining show."

Sergeant Eder notes command information is paramount in a hostile environment where entertainment is routinely bundled with daily survival. He recounted graphic stories in which he was able to put his role as a radio personality into perspective.

"I escorted a woman who had her arm blown off at the Al Rasheed Hotel in Baghdad," the NCO said about a bombing the day before Ramadan, a month of prayer and fasting for more than a billion Muslims. "There were countless near misses as we returned from Mosul, and we lost three military members to a mortar attack at the front door."

Sergeant Eder described his night missions reporting mortar attacks as "just as scary as the media portrays it to be."

"If you have no fear at all, you'll die," he said.

Now out of imminent danger, Sergeant Eder said his goals are set to bring fresh ideas to the production house he will join at Langley AFB with the onset of Air Combat Command's new Pentagon Channel.

He added the nature of his work keeps him focused and undaunted in such a high-profile position.

"The people you get to meet in this position are void of rank, we have the ability to converse with four-star generals or a wing commander or an Airman – and many of them love what they do in the military," he said.

Sergeant Eder said he shares their sentiment, despite the rigors of the job.

"The job is difficult; you have to be reporters, spot producers, editors, videographers and more," he said.

In the longer term, Sergeant Eder said he plans to gain civilian Air Force employment upon retirement and eventually add to his Sergeant Eder said he has no difficulties ad-libbing during his radio shows. He also likes to get listeners involved by letting them call in and banter with him.

Community College of the Air Force degree with a bachelor's degree in English.

Armed with plans, alternate plans and innovative ideas, the puckish broadcaster seems to make a lasting impression wherever he goes.

"Sergeant Eder was one of the first people I met when I got to Germany," said Senior Airman Courtney Donaldson, AFN Det. 9 broadcaster. "I remember thinking, 'This is going to be an interesting tour.' I could always count on him for comic relief, and he'll be taking a piece of this place with him when he goes. That piece will be missed."

Fun and games aside, Sergeant Eder said he will not let the TJ award win cause him to rest on his laurels, though he admitted the victory has had a strong impact on his life.

"I don't want to call it the pinnacle of my career because I'm constantly adding goals, but the TJ in radio was something I'd been working on since day one," Sergeant Eder said. "My goal was to get it, I got it and I was blown away."

Air Expeditionary Force -- Be Prepared

Six years ago the Air Force created Air Expeditionary Force packages to rapidly deploy air and space power anywhere in the world. The AEF concept has proven itself repeatedly during Operations ENDURING FREEDOM and IRAQI FREEDOM -- improving predictability and stability while getting our Airmen to the fight.

Despite success with our Air and Space Expeditionary Force, two significant changes were needed to meet the demands of ongoing operations around the world. First, the new baseline deployment for the AEF increased from 90 to 120 days. This provides increased continuity to our deployed commanders who require the steady and stable expertise you bring to the fight.

The second change is to expand the number of Airmen available for AEF deployments. USAFE has already instituted measures to increase our available pool from 83% to 97%.

Today 1,176 USAFE Airmen are deployed in many different AORs from Afghanistan, to Iraq, to Africa while others are executing the fight from home. You are doing a great job and we thank you for your sacrifices. However, the work is not finished — we must continue to press ahead!

Increased predictability and stability for our Airmen are key benefits of the AEF, but only if you take advantage of the time you have. Now is the time to prepare for your next AEF deployment:

Prepare your family. There are many things you can do ahead of time to make deployments less stressful on the family: get your finances in order and maintain up to date family records in a central location, to name a few.

Ensure your training is current. Know what training is required and complete it on time. The last thing you want to do on your way out the door is spend time accomplishing overdue training.

Maintain a high degree of physical fitness. It's tough to deploy and accomplish the mission if you're physically run down or even worse on the sidelines sick. Fit to fight are words to live by.

We are all expeditionary Airmen serving in the world's premier Air Force. AEF is more than a concept; it's our way of life. Be prepared and stay vigilant!

He's got the power ... Senior Airman Brian Splain was instrumental in the power production section's installation of replacement textile aircraft arresting system components after a F-16 in-flight emergency engagement. Getting the brush from Bernie Lersch is a good thing -- as foreman at the 52nd Civil Engineer Squadron paint shop, he keeps Spangdahlem AB and Bitburg Annex facilities looking great. He also makes the "signs of the times" with traffic directional markers that keep the base functioning smoothly. His efforts were key to the unit's selection in 2003 Curtin Awards. Senior Airman James Buffin is the postal guy who delivers. He has an extremely positive attitude, which serves him well when dealing with customers and co-workers. He's loaded with energy and gets the "stamp" of approval and a salute. Think FAST for Staff Sgt. Victoria Collins, who assisted 125 members in filing their FAST travel vouchers upon return from Maple Flag and Combat Hammer. She ensured those Team Eifel warriors were paid in three days. We can't hide the fact that Staff Sgts. Shirley Quevedo and Mary Anne Reyes deserve a salute for their significant volunteer contributions as U.S. Air Forces in Europe Hidden Heroes.

Manpower, personnel functions merge

By 1st Lt. Elaine Larson Air Education and Training Command Public Affairs

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas -- Manpower, personnel and education and training functions merged and re-aligned under mission support squadrons at installations throughout the Air Force July 1.

Spangdahlem Air Base's 52nd Fighter Wing Manpower Office will move under the 52nd MSS in August.

"The merger is a Secretary of the Air Force vision aimed at improving the management and development of our most valuable resource -- people," said 2nd Lt. Douglas Huttenlocker, 52nd FW/MO.

"Manpower and personnel have been separate disciplines throughout the Air Force's history," said Col. Douglas Bell, Air Education and Training Command's manpower and organization chief. "Merging them will provide cradle-to-grave processes for human resource management."

As part of the re-alignment, the 52nd MSS will now be responsible for both manpower and personnel actions, Colonel Bell said. Lieutenant Huttenlocker said this should be a

"Spangdahlem Air Base has been ahead of the game with the merger," said Lieutenant Huttenlocker. "Our relationship with the MSS, education and training and the civilian personnel office is already outstanding, and together, we are poised to offer commanders and supervisors every tool to effectively manage the development of their people."

"The new organization will better align both military and civilian resources with manpower requirements for mission accomplishment," said Colonel Bell.

"In addition to merging organizationally, this initiative also combines manpower and personnel career fields at the officer and chief enlisted manager levels," explained Lieutenant Huttenlocker. "Over time, the career breadth of these senior leaders will make them force development experts and further improve our ability to vector skilled 'faces' to critical 'spaces'."

Throughout the Air Force, the mission support squadron commands are now the single point of contact, ensuring the effective development of Airmen.

"The increased emphasis on force development demands a better linkage between manpower requirement determination and resource development and employment," said Gen. John P. Jumper, Air Force chief of staff, in a program Action Directive.

Currently, people in separate Air Force specialties manage the three functions.

"Unfortunately, actions often happen within the separate stovepipes that hinder their overall efficiency," said the directive.

The merger may involve a physical move to mission support squadron locations, but should otherwise be invisible to the customer, said Bill Friday, the deputy chief AETC's manpower and organization.

The only change at Spangdahlem AB will be organizational, with manpower moving from a flight on the wing staff to a flight in the MSS, said Lieutenant Huttenlocker.

Unproductive work relationships create negative domino effect

By Cinni Youngblood

52nd Fighter Wing Civilian Complaints of Discrimination

hat a privilege it is to work in an environment comprised of people with different backgrounds, cultures and beliefs. However, working in this unique military environment emphasizes greater responsibility on each and every individual to treat people fairly, with respect and with dignity.

Imagine having a job you dreaded going to each day because the working environment was quite challenging -- co-workers who work side by side, daring to say, "good-morning" to each other.

Now Murphy's Law has shown its ugliest face. The one person you could not get a long with has just been promoted to the next grade or rank. And now, there's a good chance of you having to call them, sir or ma'am, Ouch!

Unproductive working relationships have a domino effect, and what hasn't fallen is barely standing, including the mission.

It's said, "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem." How do you know if you are the problem? How do you know if you are promoting an effective working environment? Ask yourself these questions.

Imagine having a job you dreaded going to each day because the working environment was quite challenging -co-workers who work side by side, daring to say, 'goodmorning' to each other.

- Does my behavior contribute to work output and mission accomplishment?
- · Could my behavior offend or hurt other members of the work group?
- Could my behavior send out signals that invite inappropriate behavior by others?
- Do I treat people equally regardless of race, gender, religion, etc.?
- Do I really listen when someone tries to tell me something I do not want to hear?
- Do people feel comfortable being honest with me?
- Could someone misinterpret my behavior as intentionally harmful or harassing?

- Do I care if I offend others?
- Do my subordinates or co-workers tell me about behaviors they find oppressive or inappropri-

If a couple of your honest answers got your attention, what should you do?

Apologize if necessary. Ask your co-workers how you can communicate more effectively. Hold co-workers accountable for inappropriate behavior and remind them of their responsibility to the work environment.

Strive for a more productive work atmosphere by getting to know the people you work with and respect their individuality. One bad apple does spoil the whole bunch if left in the basket too long without addressing, "what's really going on."

Seek assistance from agencies that can assist with getting the workplace back on track (e.g., Military Equal Opportunity, Civilian Complaints, chaplain).

With a little teamwork and unit cohesion, you might find yourself looking forward to going to work each day -- not because of the work, but because of the great working relationships, and that's a big payback for treating others as you like to be treated.

Spangdahlem: A life changing experience

By Russel Robinson Eifel Times reader

My name is Russel "Rusty" Robinson, and I was stationed at Spangdahlem Air Base from 1985-1988. I was an 18-year old with the world as my oyster when I arrived on base. At the time, I had no idea the impact that three short years in Germany would have on my life. This is what I learned as a Team

- This is the time of your life. It was not all a bed of roses; this was my first long-term separation from family, friends and Florida weather. But this time forged a new independence and interdependence for me. I made new friends, and many people were like family. The adventures and misadventures have now turned into stories that are still so vivid, I can almost smell the JP4 jet fuel in the air.
- Take advantage. I remember looking at the tours and trips available; I realize I should have gone on every one I could possibly afford. The places I did see still hold great interest, and they hold the interest of everyone I tell them about.
- You're a guest. Even if you never become fluent, learn some German. I realized early on in my tour that I was a guest in someone else's country and that I needed to respect European cultures and traditions.
 - Be careful. I saw too many young lives

for Team Eifel members become statistics. I was nearly killed in an off-base motorcycle accident, and the accident was totally my fault. I had thousands of miles of experience on a bike and, to this day, I remember shifting my bike into fifth gear and waking up 30 minutes later in someone's barn. As a firefighter, I saw my first dead person on a road outside Binsfeld. As I pulled the sheet over this young Airman, I just kept thinking that somewhere back in the states, his parents were having a normal day, and soon, that normal day would be shattered by a couple of visitors who would start with, "We regret to inform you ..." Remember, your life is precious to others.

• People will be changed. When people return from their tour, they will be different -better people. Whether people are "four-andout" or "a lifer," there will always be a soft spot in them for Spangdahlem AB and Germany. The Air Force alters Airmen beyond what they could possibly know. Those who serve become leaders, become resourceful, know the meaning of teamwork and have some of the fondest memories of their lives.

I returned to the base in May and was astonished by the amount of building and change that had occurred. What had not changed was the dedication and sacrifice of the men and women who day-in and day-out serve our country. I salute you all.

Playrooms

▼oncern: After arriving at Spangdahlem Air Base, my wife and I were happy to hear about the open-' ing of a children's playroom on the "Spang" side. We have now been on station for more than one year and wonder if there have been changes or were we just misinformed about the location of the playroom. If applicable, please be sure to inform us of the changes to include dates for the future opening of a children's playroom at Spangdahlem.

esponse: Thanks for your interest in a children's play area. We were originally going to put anoth-Ler operation similar to the Bitburg Play House in the ballroom of the old Spang Club. However, we relooked the needs of the community and decided against this idea because of market demographics and other available opportunities. We have a plan in the works to consider an operation similar to a gaming place, where children and families can relax and have fun -- similar to those in the States. We've done the initial field work and looked over Vogelweh's Kid's Zone and other similar operations to see how we could adapt this type of operation to best suit the Spangdahlem AB community. We have a list of equipment and furniture items required for implementation and are in the process of running a financial analysis and a survey. We need to ensure this makes good business sense and meets the needs of Team Eifel. Based on those results, we will determine which way to proceed and will establish timelines (if implemented) within 30 days. (There is a poll on the intranet asking people if their family would use a "Kid Zone" type operation, located in the old Spangdahlem AB Club ballroom in Peter's Restaurant).

Cathedrals, museums ... chocolate?

Cologne attracts visitors from around the world

By Iris Reiff

52nd Fighter Wing Public Affairs Office

One German town offers the chance to see where chocolate bunnies come from and the chance to upward spiral to the top of one of the most ecclesiastical buildings in the world.

Through a tour with Information, Tickets and Tours, people can visit Cologne's chocolate factory to see the evolution of chocolate and get to sample from the chocolate fountain. After teasing the tastebuds, travel to Cologne's famous Cathedral.

Every year, hundreds of thousands of people go to Cologne to see the world-famous Dom, or Cathedral -- the largest of its kind in Germany. Enjoy its overwhelming dimensions: interior length 468 feet, width 145 feet, height over central aisle 140 feet and height of the spires 510 feet. Enjoy the unsurpassed harmony of the different sectors of the building, the impressive unity of the Gothic design and the massive vastness of the interior as a whole.

This type of edifice with the twin spires; the cross-shaped lay-out with main aisle; transept; the chancel, or the space around the alter for clergy or the choir; gallery and the group of seven chapels is in direct relation to North French cathedrals.

The Cologne Cathedral; however, was not entirely completed in the Middle Ages. The chancel was built between 1248 and 1320. The south tower had been built up to a height of 160 feet by about the year 1400. By the middle of the 16th century, the transept and central nave had grown to a height of between 48 and 60 feet. From 1842 to 1880, the further sections were added to this gigantic torso.

In spite of its massive monumentality, the building does not appear so weightily as it really is. In order to comprehend this, it must be borne in mind that a single boos stone in the high nave has a weight of nearly two tons.

Highlighting these stones are figures from the 1360 to 1380 period on the outside of St. Peter's Door on the west front of the Cathedral. In the interior, the choir stalls still have the original adornments from the time when the Cathedral was built -- mainly about the year 1320.

Tour of Cologne

ITT offers a trip to Cologne city and the chocolate museum July 31. Space is still available. Cost is $39 for adults and $34 for children, ages 3-12.

The bus departs Spangdahlem AB at 8:30 a.m. and the Bitburg Annex at 9 a.m. The bus returns to the Eifel region around 8 p.m. Call 452-6567 for reservations and details.

2nd Lt. Shannon Collins

The Cologne Cathedral, the largest of its kind in Germany, was completed in the Middle Ages and still towers over the city today. It is an impressive structure with its Gothic design and massive interior, with detailed craftsmanship an stonework throughout the structure.

The interior of the Cathedral no longer reveals any sign of the fact that 70 workmen were employed for 11 years, repairing the war damage. The Cathedral Treasury contains medieval codices; Romanesque, gothic and baroque goldsmith work; and precious ecclesiastical vestments and utensils. The oldest work of art there is the "Peter's" Staff in antique ivory. It was no doubt originally a territorial symbol from the court of the Emperor Constantine in Trier.

In addition to the chocolate museum and the Cathedral, Cologne offers anything your heart desires, from excellent shopping opportunities to an international cuisine, museums, musicals, concerts, theaters and more.

Cologne is located 99 miles northeast of Spangdahlem Air Base and can be reached via A-60 from Bitburg within two hours traveling time. People should follow the signs to Koeln, the appropriate German name for the city, not Cologne.

The Seattle Seahawks'
Sea Gals hosted a cheerleading clinic Tuesday in conjunction with the Extreme Summer program and Armed Forces Entertainment at the Spangdahlem Air Base
Skelton Memorial Fitness
Center. The Sea Gals taught
41 girls, ages 6-18, cheers and stunts and talked at length about physical fitness and healthy activities.

"As a parent, I really liked the cheerleading clinic because it was different from the run of the mill summer programs," said LeRoyce Bratsveen, 52nd Services Squadron and wife of Staff Sgt. Edwin Bratsveen, Detachment 9 Air Force News. "This summer has been awesome in terms of what has been offered for kids at Spangdahlem AB."
